This publication is for workers who want to know more about employment rules in the Alberta workplace. It discusses legislation covering workers, their rights before starting a job, their rights and responsibilities on the job, and leaving the job temporarily or permanently.

Inside you'll find answers to questions about

- health and safety on the job
- human rights
- workers' compensation
- pay and pay deductions (including for income tax, Employment Insurance and Canada Pension)
- leave (including military reservist leave, compassionate care and maternity/parental leave)
- vacations and holidays
- pay records and earnings statements
- rests and breaks while working

All photos in this booklet are for illustrative purposes only. They are not actual photos of any individuals mentioned.

WHO IS THIS PUBLICATION FOR?

This publication is particularly useful if you're new to the workplace. You could be a young person looking for your very first job. You could be an immigrant, an international student or a temporary foreign worker starting your first job in Alberta. Or you could be starting work again after being out of the job market for a while.

Whatever you do in the workplace, the laws of Alberta and Canada have rules that apply before you're hired, while you're on the job and when you leave a job or are fired or laid off. Think of these rules as workplace rights and responsibilities. Sometimes they cover you as a worker. Sometimes they apply to your employer. And sometimes they apply to both of you.

Temporary foreign workers

If you are a temporary foreign worker, all human rights requirements and employment standards that apply to Canadian citizens and permanent Canadian residents also apply to you. But to work in Alberta, you must meet temporary worker visa, medical and Canadian work permit requirements. For more information, call the Temporary Foreign Worker Helpline toll-free in Alberta at 1-877-944-9955 or go online to work.alberta.ca/tfw.

Find out more

This book covers the most important laws and regulations about workplace rights and responsibilities. To know more, check the resources listed throughout this publication. See Key Contacts and Resources on page 29 for a summary of workplace resources listed by subject.

You can also contact the organizations listed in this publication to formally complain or appeal an employment decision. You don't have to give your name when calling for information. Complaint deadlines are listed on page 28.

Youth employment law handbook

Know Your Rights in the Workplace: A Youth Employment Law Handbook provides in-depth information on employment law. For more information, call the Alberta Civil Liberties Research Centre in Calgary at 403-220-2505 or visit their website at aclrc.com.

The Rules: What is Covered

The Alberta Employment Standards Code sets minimum standards for earnings, minimum wage, hours of work, days of rest, overtime pay, vacation pay, general holiday pay, maternity and parental leave, reservist leave, compassionate care leave, ending work, and hiring workers under 18.

Besides rules relating to the Employment Standards Code, this book describes the workplace rights and responsibilities written in other Alberta laws and codes, including the

- Alberta Human Rights Act
- Occupational Health and Safety Code
- Workers' Compensation Act
- Labour Relations Code
- Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act
- Personal Information Protection Act

Entitlements and benefits

The basic requirements of the Employment Standards Code are entitlements. Entitlements are what your employer must give you. If your employer offers more than the basic entitlement—for example, more vacation time than required by the Code—you are getting a benefit.

SOME EXCEPTIONS

The Alberta Employment Standards Code applies to most Alberta employers and their workers. Even if it covers your workplace, parts of the Code might not apply to you. For example, construction workers have different rules for vacation and holiday pay, and for giving notice about a job ending. If you think different rules might apply to your workplace or industry, call Employment Standards.

Where the Canada Labour Code applies

Some Alberta workers and employers fall under the Canada Labour Code. That Code applies to you if you work directly for the federal government or if:

1. Your employer performs a function or duty on behalf of the Government of Canada, which includes most federal Crown corporations and federal special operating agencies.
 2. Your employer is a federal undertaking or business, which includes
 - air transport, including airports, aerodromes and airlines
 - banks
 - fisheries protection
 - grain elevators, feed and seed mills
 - interprovincial pipelines, canals, tunnels and bridges
 - many First Nations activities
 - marine shipping, ferry and port services
 - phone, telegraph and cable systems
 - private businesses necessary to the operation of a federal act
 - radio and TV broadcasting
 - rail and road transport that crosses borders
 - uranium mining and processing

This publication does not discuss federal employment standards. For more information about the Canada Labour Code, contact:

YOUR RIGHTS BEFORE YOU'RE HIRED

Protecting your human rights

The Alberta Human Rights Act makes it illegal to discriminate or treat people unfairly because of their

- race
- religious belief
- colour
- gender
- gender expression
- gender identity
- physical disability
- mental disability
- age
- ancestry
- place of origin
- marital status
- source of income
- family status
- sexual orientation

These 15 types of discrimination are sometimes called protected grounds. The Act also protects individuals from discrimination in certain areas, such as employment.

The Alberta Human Rights Commission is an independent commission created by the Government of Alberta that

- fosters equality and reduces discrimination
- provides public information and education programs
- helps Albertans resolve human rights complaints

The Alberta Human Rights Act protects you from discrimination when you're applying or competing for a job. It requires that job advertisements, applications, competitions or notices be fair. That means an employer can't refuse your job application or deny you a job interview, for example, because you have a history of mental illness or you are pregnant. Similarly, your religion, your marital status or any of the other types of discrimination listed above can't be held against you when applying.

Employment age in the Alberta Human Rights Act is defined as "18 years or older". If you are 18 or older, you can't be told you are too young or too old for a job. Specific rules protect workers younger than 18 (see Young Workers, page 8). If you are under the age of 18, you can make a complaint of discrimination to the Alberta Human Rights Commission in the area of employment on all grounds listed above except age.

What employers can and can't ask

The Alberta Human Rights Act prevents employers from asking you questions about the 15 protected grounds during job interviews, on job application forms, when checking references or when using other ways of collecting information about you. You can refuse to answer such questions or just write "not applicable."

While employers can't ask your age, they can ask if you are at least 18 since specific rules apply if you're younger. Though employers can't ask about your ancestry, where you were born or what country you come from, they can ask if you are allowed to work in Canada. If you already have a Social Insurance Number (SIN) or can apply for one, it usually means that you can work in Canada. Rules on the use of SINs require you to provide the number to your employer once you're hired but not before.

Job-related skills testing

Some jobs require physical co-ordination, strength or the ability to handle stress. An employer can test you for job-related skills during the hiring process but must give the same tests to everyone being hired for similar work. Tests must relate to the job. So, if you're applying for a labour job, an employer can't test your keyboarding skills. If you're looking for office work, an employer can't test whether you can lift a certain weight.

Drug and alcohol testing

You can be tested for drugs and alcohol after hiring if your employer can show the test is reasonable, justifiable and doesn't violate your human rights.

Appearance and dress

Employers can't make appearance and dress a concern before you are hired. But, once you're hired, employers can set standards for safety and health in the workplace as long as it doesn't interfere with your religious practice or physical well-being.

For questions about human rights or to make a complaint, contact the confidential inquiry line at the Alberta Human Rights Commission:

Website: albertahumanrights.ab.ca

Because of confidentiality concerns, the Commission can't receive or reply to complaints of discrimination by email or through the Internet.

Security checks and bonding

Before starting a job, you may need to complete a security check through the local police service. A security check is especially required if you're working with children, persons with disabilities and the elderly, or if you're handling money or confidential information. For some jobs, where it's important to protect against fraud or theft, your employer may check if you are bondable (whether you can be insured through your employer to handle sums of money).

Social Insurance Numbers

You need a Social Insurance Number (SIN) to work in Canada or to access certain government programs and benefits, such as Employment Insurance (EI) or the Canada Pension Plan (CPP). You don't have to give out your SIN before you're hired. But once you're hired, your employer needs your SIN to record deductions taken from you and payments made for you by your employer for income tax, CPP and EI. If you don't have a SIN, visit a Service Canada office to apply.

YOUNG WORKERS

Rules for adolescents (12, 13 and 14 years old)

If you're 12, 13 or 14 years old, you

- can be hired for approved work that's not dangerous to your life, health, education or welfare
- must have written permission from your parent or guardian before you begin work
- can work only two hours on school days and eight hours on non-school days
- can't work between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m.
- can't work during regular school hours unless enrolled in an approved off-campus education program, such as Alberta's Work Experience and Registered Apprenticeship programs

Approved work includes

- making deliveries for a retail store
- delivering newspapers or flyers
- working as a clerk in offices or retail stores
- working in certain jobs in the restaurant and food services industry if you, your parent or guardian, and your employer have signed a safety checklist before you start work (your employer keeps one copy and sends the other to Employment Standards.)

For work that doesn't follow these rules, your employer needs to complete and have you sign an application for a permit. You won't be able to start work until the permit has been granted by Employment Standards. The permit still has the restriction that you can work only two hours on school days and eight hours on non-school days and that you can't work between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m. or during regular school hours.

Rules for young persons (15, 16 and 17 years old)

If you're 15, 16 or 17, you can't work between midnight and 6 a.m. unless

- you have written permission from your parent or guardian
- you always have a co-worker or supervisor 18 or older within eyesight and hearing distance

If you're 15, you can't work during school hours unless you're enrolled in an approved off-campus education program. Such programs include Alberta's Work Experience and Registered Apprenticeship programs, which both have options for you to earn school credits while working in approved job placements.

If you're 15, 16 or 17, you can't work between midnight and 6 a.m. in a

- place that sells food or drink
- retail store
- retail business selling gas or other petroleum or natural gas products
- hotel or motel

When working in such places between 9 p.m. and midnight, you must always have an adult employee (18 or older) within eyesight and hearing distance. (See also Working alone, page 17.)

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS

Rules for international students

If you're an international student studying full time at a post-secondary institution your student permit lets you work on or off campus up to 20 hours a week during the school year and full time during scheduled academic breaks.

Rules for international post-grads

If you're an international student who has recently completed a program of study that lasted at least eight months in Canada, you may apply and qualify for a Post-Graduate Work Permit. It lets you work in Canada for a period after graduation to gain work experience.

To find out more about employment rules for international students, contact Citizenship and Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship:

Your first three months

During your first three months on the job, you or your employer may end employment without written notice. Don't confuse this with working for free or a trial period before you're officially hired and on the payroll—something an employer can't request and you can't offer. Once hired, you must be paid during orientation and training. After training, you're entitled to pay and other Employment Standards Code entitlements. Employment Standards doesn't cover you if you're enrolled in officially recognized unpaid work experience programs, such as through a school board, but other rules apply to protect you.

SPECIAL NEEDS AND CIRCUMSTANCES

Under Alberta's human rights law, both you and your employer share responsibilities for helping make sure people of different abilities and backgrounds are respected and accepted where you work. You and your employer are partners in making sure human rights requirements, such as the ones listed below, are followed in your workplace.

Duty to accommodate

Employers have a legal duty to give all Albertans equal opportunity in the workplace by protecting human rights related to the 15 protected grounds listed under Protecting your human rights on page 7.

To protect your rights, your employer may have to modify

- rules
- standards
- policies
- practices
- workplace attitudes or cultures
- workplace environment

If you feel you require changes in these areas to meet your specific needs, talk to your employer.

Changes and adjustments could involve

- buying or modifying tools, equipment or aids
- altering the premises to make them more accessible
- altering some job duties
- providing flexible work schedules
- offering rehabilitation programs
- providing time off for recuperation
- approving a transfer to a different job
- hiring an assistant
- using temporary workers
- relaxing requirements to wear a uniform

The human rights requirement to change workplaces in such ways is called the duty to accommodate. Employers have a duty to accommodate up to the point of undue hardship. Undue hardship occurs if meeting your particular needs would cause great difficulty for your employer, such as spending unreasonable amounts of money or seriously interfering with the business. Usually, your employer must provide some accommodation.

Disability Related Employment Supports

The Government of Alberta offers Disability Related Employment Supports (DRES) to help you if you have a disability. Types of DRES available for eligible workers and employers to help meet workplace needs include

- workplace supports, such as a job coach, work site modifications or technology
- job search supports, such as a sign language interpreter so you can attend a job search workshop if you're deaf or hard of hearing
- education supports, such as sign language interpreters, tutors, note takers or readers, if you're taking post-secondary, upgrading, skills training courses or labour market programs
- assistive technology, which might include software to read material if you have difficulty reading

To learn more about DRES, call the Alberta Career Information Hotline at 1-800-661-3753 toll-free in Alberta or 780-422-4266 in Edmonton. Deaf and hard of hearing callers with TTY can call 780-427-9999 in Edmonton or 1-800-232-7215 toll-free in other Alberta locations. Or, go to humanservices.alberta.ca/dres.

Appearance and dress

Provided they don't interfere with your religious practice or physical well-being, your employer can set reasonable rules for appearance and dress. This can include meeting rules for neatness, grooming, safety and health.

Because of confidentiality concerns, the Commission can't receive or reply to complaints of discrimination by email or through the Internet.

GETTING PAID

The Employment Standards Code sets the minimum wage you must be paid each hour, whether paid a salary, commission or wages. Whether you are full time, part time, casual, commissioned, salaried, or a student or pieceworker, the Code also states when and how you are to be paid regular pay, overtime pay, vacation pay and general holiday pay. When your workplace has a union, a collective agreement may set when and how you're paid.

Minimum wage

Alberta's minimum wages apply to most industries and workplaces. Minimum wage does not include tips, bonuses and allowances. For some industries and types of work, there are exceptions to the minimum wage rules. (See Employment Standards contact information on page 13 to find out more regarding exceptions and changes to minimum wage rules.)

Regular pay

Your employer can pay you daily, weekly, every second week, semi-monthly or monthly (the longest pay period allowed). You must be paid no later than 10 calendar days after the end of each pay period. You must be given a pay stub that demonstrates how your pay was calculated. Your employer can pay you

- in cash
- by money order
- by cheque
- by direct deposit into your bank account

For direct deposit, your employer may ask for

- the name of your bank or credit union
- your bank account number or a blank, unsigned cheque with the word VOID written across it

Overtime and overtime pay

You're entitled to time-and-a-half (1.5 times your regular hourly wage) for overtime work. In most industries, you must work more than eight hours a day or more than 44 hours a week before overtime applies. In certain industries or jobs—for example, if you're a manager or supervisor or work in oilwell servicing—there may be different rules for overtime and hours worked.

Sometimes, instead of paying overtime, your employer may let you take time off equal to the overtime you worked. This is called an Overtime Agreement and it must be in writing. When you're hired, ask and understand how overtime is paid.

Vacation pay

Your vacation pay depends on how much you earn and how long you have worked for your employer. Vacation pay is a percentage of your regular wages. This means your vacation pay is not increased or decreased by

- overtime pay
- general holiday pay
- bonuses
- expense allowances
- unearned bonuses

After working one year for the same employer, you're entitled to two weeks of vacation pay or an amount equal to four per cent of your regular pay. If you have worked less than a year when you leave, your vacation pay is four per cent of your earnings. When working in construction or brush clearing, your vacation pay equals six per cent of your wages.

Your employer can pay out vacation pay at any time but must provide your vacation pay no later than the first scheduled payday after your vacation begins.

General holiday pay

Alberta's nine general or statutory (stat) holidays are:

- New Year's Day
- Alberta Family Day
- Good Friday
- Victoria Day
- Canada Day
- Labour Day
- Thanksgiving Day
- Remembrance Day
- Christmas Day

Your employer may also decide to treat some other days, such as Boxing Day, as holidays. Most workers are entitled to general holiday pay. Some workers are not. (See Employment Standards contact information on this page to find out more about workers who are entitled to general holiday pay.)

If you qualify for holiday pay and it falls on your regular workday, you're entitled to be paid at least at your average daily wage even though you have the day off work. To be eligible for holiday pay, you must have

- worked for your employer for at least 30 working days or shifts in the 12 months before the general holiday
- worked your last scheduled shift before, and the first scheduled shift after, the holiday (you're still eligible if you have your employer's permission to be absent for either or both of these shifts)
- not refused to work on the general holiday when required or scheduled to do so

When a general holiday falls during your annual vacation, your employer must extend your vacation by one day with pay or give you a paid day off before your next annual vacation starts.

Working as a contractor

If you contract to work for a certain time or on a certain task, you may be considered self-employed. In this case, different rules for pay, hours of work, tax deductions, Employment Insurance, Canada Pension Plan and Workers' Compensation may apply. If a temporary employment agency hires you, you may be called a contract worker, but in that case you're usually an employee, not a self-employed contractor.

Equal pay for similar work

Under Alberta's human rights law, men and women working in the same place and doing the same or similar work must be paid at the same wage. Differences in pay must be based on experience, education or job performance, not on whether you're male or female.

Pay for working on a holiday

Your situation

You are entitled to general holiday pay and you work on the holiday.

The holiday is your regular day off but you work on the holiday.

Your employer must pay

Regular rate of pay plus time and a half (1.5 times) regular pay. In some cases, instead of paying time and a half, your employer can pay you regular pay on the holiday and give you a future day off with pay (scheduled no later than your next annual vacation).

1.5 times your regular rate of pay for each hour worked.

DEDUCTIONS FROM YOUR PAY

Usually you will not be paid your total or gross pay, which is your pay before any deductions are made. Instead, you will be paid a net pay—the amount that is left once your employer has deducted your income tax, Canada Pension Plan contributions, payments (premiums) for Employment Insurance and any other deductions from your gross pay.

The Employment Standards Code limits what your employer can deduct from your pay. There are some deductions that are not allowed, even if you agree in writing. For example, your employer can't take deductions for faulty workmanship or deduct for cash shortages or loss of property where more than one person has access to the cash or property.

This section also explains other deductions, such as for food, board and clothing, that might be taken from your pay.

Approved deductions

Deductions from earnings may include

- Income tax deduction—the amount your employer takes off for federal and provincial income taxes. The amount deducted depends on whether you are single or have children or other dependants. Tell your employer if your number of dependants changes.
- Canada Pension Plan (CPP) contribution—the amount, depending on your earnings, that you contribute toward your CPP if you're 18 years or older. You contribute every year until you retire—aged 60 at the earliest.
- Employment Insurance (EI) contribution—the amount, depending on your earnings, that you contribute toward EI.
- Garnishee deduction—the amount deducted if there is a judgment or court order against part of your pay. (A person who is owed money by you obtains a court order and a specific amount of money is removed from your pay and sent to the person who obtained the court order.) Besides the courts, the usual sources of garnishees are the Canada Revenue Agency and Alberta's Maintenance Enforcement Program.
- Union dues—the amount deducted and sent to a union if the workplace has a union and payment is authorized by the collective agreement between your union and your employer.

Other deductions, which you must approve in writing, may include

- life insurance coverage
- extended health care plan payment
- disability insurance coverage
- dental plan payment

Keeping your own employment information

Keeping your own records, including your pay stubs, is helpful if you need to clarify something with your employer about pay for the hours you have worked or if you decide to file an official complaint.

- parking fee
- contribution to charities
- social club membership
- pension plan contributions other than CPP

Food, board and clothing deductions

When providing food, board or clothing, your employer can charge you, up to certain limits. For the most current information on food, lodging and clothing deductions, visit work.alberta.ca/esfactsheets and then select Deductions from Earnings.

If you have questions about deductions, first talk to your supervisor or employer. If you need more information, contact Employment Standards:

PAY RECORDS

Your employer must provide a statement of earnings and deductions (pay stub or pay slip). The pay stub is given to you with your paycheque or when a direct deposit is made in your bank or credit union. Your employer must also answer any questions you have about how your earnings are calculated.

Statement of earnings

Although your pay stub may vary from employer to employer, it must include

- your name
- pay period covered by the statement
- wage rate and overtime rate
- general holiday pay
- regular hours worked and earnings from regular hours
- overtime hours worked and earnings from overtime hours
- time off provided and taken instead of overtime
- the amount of each deduction from earnings and reason for each deduction
- the amount set aside or paid by your employer in the latest pay period for your vacation pay

Your employer may decide also to include the following information on your pay stub:

- Total earnings or gross pay—the total pay before deductions in the latest pay period.
- Net pay or net earnings—the amount you receive after deductions are taken from total earnings.

Completing TD1 forms

When you start a new job, even a part-time or summer job, your employer has you complete and sign both a Personal Tax Credits Return Form (TD1) and an Alberta Personal Tax Credits Return (TD1AB). Your employer uses this to determine your deductions from your pay stub and record your name, address and Social Insurance Number (SIN). If your total yearly income from all of your employers is less than the total claim amount on these forms, your employer doesn't have to deduct tax from your earnings. But your employer still has to deduct Employment Insurance (EI) and possibly Canada Pension Plan (CPP) from your pay even if you didn't earn enough to pay income tax. (See Approved deductions, page 14.) If your employer deducts too much EI or CPP, you can reclaim the overpayments when you file your income tax return. Special deduction rules may apply for certain jobs, such as commissioned salespeople. If you're unsure about your deductions, check with the Canada Revenue Agency online at cra.gc.ca or by phone at 1-800-959-8281 toll-free.

TAKING RESTS AND BREAKS

Hours of rest and work

You need adequate breaks while at work and between shifts. See Required breaks and rest periods at right.

Knowing what counts as work

You are working when providing a service for your employer, including time you spend

- in meetings or training, if your employer requires you to attend
- travelling between job locations

Taking vacations

After working 12 months for an employer, you are entitled to vacation with pay. See Minimum vacation entitlement, bottom right. Keep in mind that

- your employer has the final say on when you take vacation if you can't agree on a vacation time
- you can take vacations in one unbroken period or in shorter periods of not less than a day, if you request this and your employer agrees
- when working in construction or brush clearing, your vacation pay should be equal to six per cent of your wages

STAYING HEALTHY AND SAFE ON THE JOB

By working together, you and your employer can make your workplace healthy and safe. That's important throughout your working career but it's particularly important when you're a younger worker. If you are 15 to 24, you are one-third more likely than someone 25 or older to be injured at work. For this reason, it is especially important for young workers and their employers to pay attention to workplace health and safety.

If a workplace is unsafe, provincial Occupational Health and Safety officers can require changes, shut down equipment or stop work entirely. They can also impose Administrative Penalties and issue Tickets to parties who are not in compliance with OHS regulations.

Required breaks and rest periods

Time Period	Break or Rest Requirement
5 hours or less	No break entitlement
More than 5 hours	You are entitled to at least 30 minutes of rest, paid or unpaid. (It can be taken in one unbroken period or several shorter periods totaling at least 30 minutes).
12 hours	Maximum work period in a day, except in emergencies and some industries, such as geophysical exploration and oilwell servicing.
8 hours	Minimum rest period between shifts when there is an employee change (for example, moving from the night shift to the day shift).
24 hours	Minimum period for being notified of a shift change.
1 day	Minimum rest period for each week. Rest days can be saved for use at one time within a four-week period.
24 consecutive days	Maximum consecutive days you can be required to work. This period must be followed by four days in a row of rest.

Minimum vacation entitlement

Length of Employment (with one employer)	Minimum Vacation
After 1, 2, 3 or 4 years	2 weeks
After 5 years	3 weeks

Eliminating and controlling work site hazards

Alberta's Occupational Health and Safety Code requires employers to eliminate or control hazards. Employers are required to perform a work site hazard assessment, to identify the current hazards and to eliminate or control them. Most workers are covered by this Code. Some workers are exempt from this Code (to find out more, see Occupational Health and Safety contact information on this page.)

Federal government workers and those who work in federally regulated industries are covered by the Canada Labour Code and other federal laws regarding worksite hazards (see Where the Canada Labour Code applies on page 4 for a reference of who is considered a federal worker, and contact information for further details on the federal Code.)

Your responsibilities

On the job, you must make sure you

- work safely and co-operate with your employer by following health and safety rules
- use appropriate safety and personal protective equipment
- take part in health and safety training
- report unsafe working conditions to your employer or supervisor
- help protect the health and safety of your co-workers
- operate equipment safely

Your employer's responsibilities

On the job, your employer must

- protect you and your co-workers' health and safety
- assess and control workplace hazards
- inform you of any hazards on the work site, and controls in place
- develop safe work practices and make sure they are followed
- make sure you have proper skills and training to do your job safely. The OHS Act also allows a worker to work under the direct supervision of a competent worker.
- keep equipment in safe working order and ensure it can safely perform the function it was designed for

- label and store hazardous chemicals properly
- monitor you if you are exposed to certain chemicals (and, in some cases, require health examinations)
- report workplace deaths and serious injuries to Alberta Occupational Health and Safety
- ensure you are aware of your health and safety responsibilities
- control your exposure to harmful substances within allowable limits

If you're concerned about health and safety issues in your workplace, talk to your supervisor. If your concerns aren't resolved, speak to who your supervisor reports to. If the situation still doesn't change or improve, call the Occupational Health and Safety Contact Centre.

Working alone

With some exceptions, it is legal in Alberta to work alone but your employer must take steps to keep you safe, such as assessing the hazards of not being accompanied when doing particular work. Your employer, supervisor or co-worker must keep in touch with you through appropriate, regular contact while you are working alone. You must also be given an effective means of communication, such as a cellphone, two-way radio or alarm, so that you can reach help.

Special rules on working alone apply to workers aged 15 to 17. (See Young Workers, page 8.)

For more information or to report concerns about workplace health and safety issues, including working alone, call the Alberta Occupational Health and Safety Contact Centre:

"Can I be fired for refusing to work in unhealthy or unsafe working conditions?"

No. It's against Alberta law to fire a worker for refusing to work in unhealthy or unsafe working conditions that violate the Occupational Health and Safety Code.

Preventing violence in the workplace

Workplace violence, whether threatened or carried out, is a workplace hazard.

Your role

As a worker, you can help prevent workplace violence by

- treating your co-workers, clients and the public with respect and dignity
- helping your employer develop policies and procedures to prevent violence
- taking part in education programs
- reporting workplace violence

Your employer's role

To prevent violence in the workplace, the Occupational Health and Safety Code requires employers to

- identify potential workplace violence in their hazard assessment
- develop policies and procedures to minimize or eliminate workplace violence as well as how it will be investigated, documented and reported
- teach workers how to recognize workplace violence and respond appropriately, including where to get help

Employers must ensure that workers who complain about workplace hazards, including violence, are not penalized.

The Alberta Human Rights Commission responds to complaints of workplace harassment related to any of the 15 grounds protected under Alberta's human rights law. These grounds relate to race, religious belief, colour, gender expression, gender identity, physical disability, mental disability, age, ancestry, place of origin, marital status, source of income, family status or sexual orientation.

Preparing for workplace emergencies

It's best for everyone if injuries and emergencies in the workplace can be prevented, but sometimes they happen. When they do, it's important to be ready to respond.

Your employer's role

Employers need to have a plan for emergencies, such as fires, that may require rescue or evacuation. Your employer's emergency response plan must

- be in writing
- be shared with all affected workers
- be kept up-to-date and reflect current circumstances in the work site
- designate workers who will provide rescue services and supervise evacuation procedures in an emergency

Employers must provide designated rescue and evacuation workers with

- emergency response training
- appropriate personal protective clothing and equipment, if required
- regular ongoing exercise drills to competently carry out their duties
- a first aid plan

Your role

You can contribute to emergency preparation and response in your workplace by

- asking if your employer has an emergency response plan
- knowing where the plan is kept
- reading, reviewing and following the directions of the plan
- knowing your responsibilities in an emergency
- making sure you have proper training and equipment if your employer asks you to provide rescue services or supervise an evacuation
- suggesting improvements to the plan

RECEIVING WORKERS' COMPENSATION COVERAGE

Most Alberta industries are required to provide workers' compensation coverage. Regardless of your age, the Alberta Workers' Compensation Board (WCB) provides this no-fault liability and disability insurance for work-related injuries and illnesses. You may want to ask your supervisor or employer if you are covered by WCB.

Workers' Compensation

- pays you disability payments for lost wages (based on 90 per cent of your net earnings), up to a maximum
- pays your medical expenses whether or not you as a worker are responsible for the work-related injury or illness
- helps with your treatment program
- helps you, if injured, gradually return to your regular job through modified work programs
- pays funeral expenses and survivor benefits in case of workplace-related death

Who WCB covers

WCB covers you as a worker whether you are

- full time
- part time
- casual or temporary (including foreign workers)
- on contract
- a subcontractor (if considered an employee, not an independent contractor)
- working on commission
- an apprentice

Your duties if injured

If you are injured or require medical attention at work

- see a doctor immediately
- tell your employer what happened
- complete a WCB Worker Report of Injury form to start your claim

Free course – Healthy and Safety Rights for Workers

The New Alberta Workers program offers a workshop to help new workers identify, eliminate and control hazards and explain how to refuse unsafe work. The workshop also explains worker rights and responsibilities. To book the course, send an email to info@newalbertaworkers.org or call toll-free 1-888-729-4869.

Your employer's duties

Your employer pays all of the contributions toward WCB—nothing is deducted from your wage or salary.

Your employer must

- tell you about your WCB coverage
- report any injuries to WCB, including reporting when you return to work after an injury
- help you return to work following an injury (see Duty to accommodate, page 11)

For more information about workers' compensation, or to find out whether your industry is covered, contact the Workers' Compensation Board of Alberta:

“Is there a waiting period before WCB coverage begins?”

No. If your employer is in an industry that must have Workers' Compensation coverage, you are covered as soon as you start your job.

ORGANIZING AND BELONGING TO UNIONS

Unions are organizations that act on behalf of workers for improved wages, benefits and working conditions. The Alberta Labour Relations Code, administered by the Alberta Labour Relations Board, oversees

- how unions are formed
- how a worker can join a union
- the rights of employers, workers and unions in unionized workplaces
- how you can access a grievance procedure if you feel your union's collective agreement or rights on the job have been violated

Under this Code, most Alberta workers have the right to form or join unions and collectively bargain with their employer. Some Alberta workers are not covered by this Code however—for example, separate labour laws cover federal and provincial workers and police officers, among others. (For a list of who is covered by the Alberta Labour Relations Code, refer to the Alberta Labour Relations Board contact information on this page.)

The Canada Labour Code addresses union participation for federal government workers and those who work in federally regulated industries (see Where the Canada Labour Code applies on page 4 for a reference of who is considered a federal worker, and contact information for further details on the federal Code.)

Depending on your job, you may have to join a union within a certain timeframe. For example, to work in “closed shops,” which are quite common in the construction industry, you must belong to that shop's union before you will be allowed to work there.

Forming or joining a union

Workers interested in working collectively for labour relations purposes can either create a new union or join an existing union. To create a new union, workers must prepare a constitution and bylaws and file them with the Labour Relations Board. The Labour Relations Code says how workers can ask for a democratic vote in their workplace to certify or remove a union as bargaining agent.

No employer or union can take action against you or other workers who try to join, form, certify or remove a union.

Paying union dues

Unions can collect dues from their members. If you agree in writing to have dues collected, the Code lets your employer collect them and pass them on to the union.

On religious grounds, you can ask the Labour Relations Board for permission not to belong to a union or to pay union dues (but you must pay an amount equal to the dues to a registered charity).

Responding to other labour relations issues

You can contact the Labour Relations Board about other labour relations issues, including

- unfair labour practices
- strikes and lockouts
- collective bargaining
- mediation to settle labour–management disputes

The Board produces an overview of labour relations called A Guide to Alberta's Labour Relations Laws, available at alrb.gov.ab.ca.

For more information on forming and belonging to unions, contact the Alberta Labour Relations Board:

“If I am on strike or locked out, am I still an employee? Can I get my job back once the strike or lockout is over?”

Yes. Although not entitled to pay, you can't be fired for being on strike or locked out by your employer. When the strike or lockout ends, you are entitled to get your job back.

PROTECTING WORKER'S PERSONAL INFORMATION AND PRIVACY

Alberta has two acts dealing with the collection, use and the release of personal information of workers. You're covered by the Personal Information Protection Act (PIPA) if you work in the private sector. You come under the Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act (FOIP) if you work for the provincial government or for other agencies, such as school boards and hospitals.

Collecting and using your personal information

When collecting your personal information, your employer must tell you why it's needed and how it may be used or disclosed. Employers may only collect work-related information about you.

Although your employer will usually collect personal information directly from you, the law does allow your employer to collect information about you from others. For example, your employer may collect information about you from previous employers when checking references.

The most common types of personal information an employer collects about you are

- name, address, telephone number, date of birth
- Social Insurance Number
- resumé and references
- education history
- information about your dependants (for such things as health and life insurance)

Your employer normally uses personal information for

- employment, including recruiting, hiring and firing workers
- payroll and benefits, including hours worked and scheduling shifts
- performance evaluation
- training and development programs
- occupational health and safety programs

Disclosing your personal information

A few people at your work, such as your supervisor or those handling payroll, may have the authority to access your personal information to do their job.

Some provisions in privacy legislation do allow your employer to disclose your personal information. These include

- providing information to the Canada Revenue Agency for tax purposes
- sharing information with an insurer that provides employee benefits
- publishing your business contact information in a company phone book or website
- contacting family in an emergency
- co-operating with a law enforcement investigation
- passing along information to a third party when you make the request, such as confirming your salary for a bank
- disclosing information when required by law, such as during an investigation into a workplace accident
- if there is authorization by an Alberta or Canada enactment that authorizes or requires the disclosure

You have a right to

- request access to your own personal information and to receive an explanation for any information that is not given
- know how your personal information has been used or released
- ask for a correction if there are mistakes in your personal information

If you have a union-employer collective agreement, there may be additional work-related personal information allowed to be collected, used or disclosed. Employees can contact their union representative or review their collective agreement regarding what other work-related personal information may be collected.

LEAVING YOUR JOB TEMPORARILY

You may decide to take weeks, months or even years off work. If your employer agrees, you may return or be rehired later, but your employer doesn't have to rehire you. There are four situations when you're entitled to return and your employer must take you back. These include maternity leave, parental leave, reservist leave and compassionate care leave.

Maternity and parental leave

If you are a full-time or part-time employee and you have worked at least 52 weeks in a row for one employer, Alberta's Employment Standards Code entitles you to

- 15 weeks of unpaid maternity leave and 37 weeks of unpaid parental leave
- return to your job or an equivalent job after your maternity or parental leave
- work your usual number of hours and not be laid off or forced to resign because of your pregnancy or childbirth

As a new parent through birth or adoption, you may qualify for maternity or parental benefits under the Government of Canada's Employment Insurance (EI) program. See Becoming a Parent guide, page 24.

Maternity and parental leave under Alberta's Employment Standards Code

Entitlement	Who Claims	Length	Start Date
Unpaid maternity leave	Birth mother	Up to 15 weeks	From 12 weeks before due date to date of child's birth
Unpaid parental leave	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Birth mother• Father• Adoptive parent Can be taken by one of the parents or shared by two parents if employers are notified.	Up to 37 consecutive weeks	When maternity leave is finished. Fathers or adoptive parents can start leave any time within 52 weeks after the child is born or adopted.

“If I haven’t worked for the same employer for 52 weeks in a row and don’t qualify for maternity leave, can I be fired because I am pregnant?”

Under human rights law, even if you haven’t worked for someone for 52 weeks in a row, your employer can’t fire you, lay you off, reduce hours of work or make you resign because you’re pregnant or have given birth.

Your employer must accommodate health effects of pregnancy and childbirth. Even if you don’t qualify for maternity or parental leave, under the Alberta Human Rights Act, you will be able to take sick leave for health-related reasons due to pregnancy provided you give reasonable notice.

For more information about human rights law and pregnancy in the workplace, contact the Alberta Human Rights Commission. (See Key Contacts and Resources, page 29).

Giving notice about maternity or parental leave

When taking maternity or parental leave, you must give your employer written notice of at least

- six weeks before taking leave
- four weeks before you plan to return to work
- four weeks if you decide to change the day you are returning to work

Your employer doesn’t have to allow you to return to work after maternity or parental leave if you did not

- give proper notice
- report for work the day after the leave ended

“When can I return to work after giving birth?”

You must take at least six weeks off work after giving birth unless you have a medical certificate that says returning to work sooner won’t endanger your health.

Becoming a Parent guide

Becoming a Parent in Alberta answers many questions about maternity and parental leave and Employment Insurance benefits. To view or download this publication, visit work.alberta.ca/es (select Publications from the left-hand menu).

Reservist leave

If you are a reservist in the Canadian Forces and are called for service outside the country or for an emergency inside Canada, your employer must provide you with unpaid leave and let you return to your job once your deployment ends. Reservists are also entitled to up to 20 days (taken in a row or over several shorter periods) each calendar year of unpaid leave for military training. You must provide your employer with at least four weeks’ written notice both before the start and end of your leave. You’re entitled to reservist leave once you’ve worked for your employer full time or part time for at least 26 weeks.

Compassionate care leave

Under the Alberta Employment Standards Code, you can take up to eight weeks of unpaid, job-protected leave from work to care for a gravely ill family member. To be eligible, you need to be the primary care giver and have worked at least 52 weeks for your employer, and provide the employer with a signed physician’s certificate regarding the family member’s need for care. You must also provide your employer at least two weeks’ notice both before the start and end date at your leave. The compassionate care leave can be taken in two shorter periods of at least one week each.

Some employees may be eligible for Employment Insurance benefits during compassionate care leave. For more information regarding rules and procedures on this, contact Service Canada (see Federal Contacts, page 33).

Compassionate care leave does not extend to paid or unpaid leave due to bereavement or attending a funeral; however, some employers may offer such leave as part of their benefit plans.

For information on reservist leave or compassionate care leave, contact Employment Standards:

Collecting EI while on temporary leave

Eligible workers who are let go from work temporarily (more than seven days) may be able to collect Employment Insurance (EI). If you qualify, EI also provides temporary financial help for special benefits if you receive below 60% of your usual pay and if you are

- pregnant or caring for a newborn or adopted child, or have recently given birth
- sick, injured, or in quarantine, and, if not for this condition, would otherwise be available for work
- providing compassionate care for a family member who is seriously ill with a significant risk of death within 26 weeks
- providing care to your child who is critically ill or injured
- an apprentice taking in-school technical training

To collect EI, you must have worked, paid into EI and earned the required insurable hours in the qualifying period.

When you leave your job temporarily, your employer must prepare and give you a Record of Employment (ROE) within five days of your last pay period. The ROE shows when you were employed, what you were paid and why you stopped work.

You need an ROE to collect EI benefits. The information provided on your ROE is used to decide how much EI you can collect and for how long. If your employer refuses to issue an ROE, contact EI.

For more information on applying for Employment Insurance benefits while on temporary leave, call Service Canada (phone 1-800-206-7218 toll-free) or go to serviccanada.gc.ca.

Sick leave

Though not required to do so by law, many Alberta employers provide sick leave or long- and short-term disability benefits.

Employers have a duty under the Alberta Human Rights Act to accommodate employees with disabilities. (See Duty to accommodate, page 11.)

Layoffs and recalls

Your employer can temporarily lay you off for up to 59 days without giving a termination notice. If the employer wishes to keep the employment relationship, a written notice of temporary layoff can be issued. Certain criteria under the Employment Standards Code must be included in the letter. If you have a break of more than seven days, your employer can issue an ROE so that you can apply for Employment Insurance. If you're not recalled within 60 days, then your employment terminates and the employer must pay termination pay, unless you are still receiving wages or benefits or a collective agreement is in place with a different recall period. School employees and school bus drivers are one exception to the 60-day rule (see Required notice, page 26, and Payment time once notice is given, page 27). During the 59-day period, an employer may recall you with one week written notice. If you do not return to work within seven days of the date specified in the written recall notice, you are not entitled to termination notice or termination pay.

If you still have questions about temporary lay off, contact Employment Standards:

LEAVING YOUR JOB PERMANENTLY

You may decide on your own to quit a job permanently to take other work, to study or for other reasons.

Maybe your employer terminates the employment relationship. The words often used in that case is that you're "let go," "fired," "dismissed" or "terminated."

Your employer can't end your employment for discriminatory reasons, even if you've been given proper notice. For example, an employer can't dismiss you because of your sexual orientation. Doing this would be considered a wrongful dismissal.

Time worked and notice required

If you decide to quit your job, you must give your employer written notice. If your employer dismisses you, your employer must give you written notice. There are some exceptions. Call Employment Standards if you have questions. The notice required by both you and your employer depends on how long you have worked continuously for your present employer.

Once you give notice, your employer can't reduce your pay or any other conditions of your employment—for example, reduced your hours, salary, status or benefits.

Your employer can ask you to stop working immediately or partway through a notice period instead of giving notice. But then your employer must pay you the wages you would have earned if you had worked during the remaining notice period.

Just cause

Your employer can ask you to leave your job with just cause without giving notice. It has to be shown or proven, for example, that you have

- falsified qualifications
- engaged in sexual harassment
- a competing interest such as setting up a similar business
- not followed health and safety requirements
- engaged in theft, fraud or dishonesty
- demonstrated insolence (disrespectful behaviour) or insubordination (refused to obey instructions)

When just cause is used as a reason for firing, your employer must make sure your human rights are protected. This means your employer must follow the requirements of the Alberta Human Rights Act that make it illegal to discriminate on any of the 15 protected grounds. (See Your Rights Before You're Hired, page 7.) For most infractions, an employee must receive written warnings prior to being fired.

Payment time once notice is given

Notice Situation	When Pay is Due
Your employer gives notice or payment instead of notice	3 calendar days after your last day of work
No notice is required from your employer	10 calendar days after your last day of work
You give notice	3 calendar days after your last day of work
No notice is required from you	10 calendar days after your last day of work
You're required to give notice but don't	10 days after the date when notice would have ended if notice had been given

Applying for EI after leaving your job permanently

Eligible workers who are let go permanently from their job may be able to collect Employment Insurance (EI). To qualify, you must have worked a certain number of hours within the past year. Once you've been let go permanently from your job, to collect EI you must be available and looking for other work. For this reason or because you may not have worked enough insurable hours, usually you can't claim EI if you are a full-time student.

To apply for Employment Insurance when you leave your job permanently, your employer must prepare and give you a Record of Employment (ROE). The ROE says when you were employed, what you were paid and why you stopped work.

Your employer must give you an ROE five days after the end of the pay period when you had your first day without pay. Besides being necessary for you to be eligible to collect EI, the information on the ROE helps determine how much EI you can receive and for how long.

If your employer refuses to issue an ROE, contact Service Canada.

For more information on applying for Employment Insurance after leaving your job permanently, call Service Canada at 1-800-206-7218 toll-free or go to Canada.gc.ca.

FILING COMPLAINTS

The government agencies mentioned throughout this book make sure rules on employment rights and responsibilities apply in your workplace. If you feel you've been treated unfairly in your workplace, you can make formal, written complaints or appeals to these agencies within certain time limits. (See Complaint Deadlines, below). You can't be fired from your job for filing complaints or helping an investigation into a complaint.

Have an Employment Standards complaint?

Talking with your employer is always the first step before you submit a complaint. If your issue cannot be resolved, submit your complaint on-line at work.alberta.ca/es. If you need assistance, please call the Employment Standards Contact Centre at 780-427-3731 in Edmonton or 1-877-427-3731 toll-free in Alberta.

Complaint deadlines

To contact the following agencies, see Key Contacts and Resources.

Agency	Deadline for Filing Complaint
Workers' Compensation Board	Within 1 year of an entitlement decision
Alberta Human Rights Commission	Within 1 year from the date of the alleged incident of discrimination
Employment Standards	6 months after the date you are let go or terminated from your job
Privacy Commissioner
Alberta's Personal Information Protection Act	30 days from the day you receive a decision about your access request
Freedom of Information and Protection of Privacy Act	60 days from the day you receive a decision about your access request
	Complaints about how your personal information is used, collected or disclosed can be made at any time.
