

Training for Work

Training for Work provides full- and part-time training opportunities to help Albertans get a job, improve their employment situation or adapt to changing labour conditions, or gain skills to sustain employment. Training for Work includes:

Aboriginal Training to Employment – partnerships with First Nations, Métis and other Aboriginal communities, organizations, government departments, industry and other interested parties to facilitate the participation of Aboriginal people in training projects.

Alberta Job Corps – an employment/training program that provides workplace experience and training for individuals who have demonstrated they are unable to get or maintain work in the competitive labour market.

First Nations Training to Employment – workplace-training opportunities for First Nations members in occupations in high demand in the labour market.

Integrated Training – skills-based training that combines academic and general employability skills with occupation-related skills.

Part-time Training – funding for part-time course(s) available for academic upgrading or occupation specific programs for individuals who want to improve their educational level and occupational skills while continuing to work.

Occupational Training – short term training that is occupation specific and may include work experience.

Quebec/Alberta Student Employment Exchange Program – provides university students with summer employment with the Alberta or Quebec provincial governments.

Self-Employment – training in business plan development, business counseling, coaching and guidance for those interested in starting their own business.

Transition to Employment Services – an array of services designed to rapidly attach participants to the labour market and provide long-term, on-the-job support.

Transitional Vocational Program – training and work experience to assist individuals with a developmental disability to obtain and maintain employment and gain independence.

Workplace Training – employer-delivered, worksite training for unemployed or marginally employed individuals.
