

New K-6 Curriculum: Practical Skills

Preparing students for success in the real world

Practical skills in the new K-6 curriculum

Students will be equipped with tangible skills that will serve them in their personal lives and careers.

The new curriculum teaches students about responsible financial choices, economics, computer science, communication, and personal safety, including consent in relationships. They will learn real-world skills such as banking, budgeting, and investing as well as the importance of nutrition and physical activity for a healthy lifestyle.

Financial literacy

Students will learn how money works. The curriculum will teach students how to earn, save, invest, spend, share and borrow money.

For the first time, financial literacy will be woven throughout the curriculum, and specifically taught in mathematics and physical education and wellness.

Students will learn, in age-appropriate ways, that money has value and allows them to purchase things they need or want.

Computer science

The new curriculum will teach computer science and problem-solving that includes coding and algorithms. Students will use algorithms, technology, and engineering to design solutions for problems. They will also learn how computers, coding, and technology have impacted our modern society.

Public speaking

Students will learn how public speaking enables them to be effective communicators. They will practise controlling their voice, making eye contact, and choosing vocabulary to help them get their message across.

Consent

Consent will be taught as an essential part of the physical education and wellness curriculum. In the early years, students will learn that personal boundaries can be communicated through words and actions and that consent is established by clearly requesting, obtaining and giving permission or communicating refusal.

Later on, students will learn more directly that sexual activity should never be forced or make individuals feel uncomfortable and that sexual activity without consent is sexual assault and is never okay.
