

Harassment and violence in the workplace

OHS requirements for workers and employers

Key Information

- Harassment and violence are workplace hazards
- Employers must develop harassment and violence prevention plans
- Employers and supervisors must ensure workers are not subject to nor participate in workplace harassment or violence
- Workers must refrain from causing or participating in harassment or violence

Harassment and violence can take place at any work site and may range from disrespectful remarks to physical aggression. Addressing issues early on can prevent acts of bullying and harassment from progressing to acts of physical violence. Alberta's Occupation Health and Safety (OHS) legislation includes requirements to help prevent workplace harassment and violence and address incidents when they do occur.

This publication explains what is required under the Alberta OHS legislation as it relates to harassment and violence. The purpose of this guide is to help employers, supervisors and workers understand everyone's role in ensuring health and safety at the workplace and how to comply with OHS rules.

Employers in the retail fuel and convenience sector must meet additional requirements when develop and implement violence prevention plan. More details are described in the publication: Workplace violence prevention plan for retail fuel and convenience stores - employer guide (BP031).

Workplace harassment

The OHS Act defines harassment as any single incident or repeated incidents of objectionable or unwelcome conduct, comment, bullying or action by a person that the person knows or ought reasonably to know will or would cause offence or humiliation to a worker, or adversely affects the worker's health and safety, and includes

- conduct, comments, bullying or actions because of race, religious beliefs, colour, physical disability, mental disability, age, ancestry, place of origin, marital status, source of income, family status, gender, gender identity, gender expression and sexual orientation, and
 - a sexual solicitation or advance,
- but excludes any reasonable conduct of an employer or supervisor related to the normal management of workers or a work site.

What is workplace harassment?

The definition of harassment in the OHS Act includes a broad range of harassing behaviours workers can be subjected to, or participate in.

Workplace harassment is behaviour intended to intimidate, offend, degrade or humiliate a particular person or group.

It is a serious issue and creates an unhealthy work environment resulting in psychological harm to workers. Harassing behaviour can include:

- unwelcome conduct, comments, gestures or contact which causes offense or humiliation (e.g. name calling, harassing phone calls, spreading rumours);
- deliberate misgendering (i.e. referring to a person using terms or pronouns that do not align with the person's affirmed gender);

- physical or psychological bullying which creates fear or mistrust or which ridicules or devalues the individual (e.g. fist shaking, yelling);
- exclusion or isolation of individuals;
- intimidation (i.e. standing too close or making inappropriate gestures/comments);
- cyber bullying (e.g. posting or sending offensive or intimidating messages through social media or email);
- deliberately setting the individual up to fail (e.g. making unreasonable demands, setting impossible deadlines, interfering with work);
- intentionally withholding information or giving the wrong information;
- taking away work or responsibility without cause; and
- displaying or circulating offensive pictures or materials in print or electronic form.

Harassment is a workplace hazard. It must be addressed during a hazard assessment.

What isn't workplace harassment?

Reasonable actions taken by an employer or supervisor while managing and directing workers are not considered harassment. Reasonable actions considered to be part of a manager's or supervisor's work functions include changing work assignments, scheduling, assessing and evaluating work performance, inspecting workplaces, implementing health and safety measures, and taking disciplinary action such as dismissing, suspending, demoting, or reprimanding with just cause. Done reasonably and fairly, these actions should not be considered to be workplace harassment.

Differences of opinion or minor disagreements between co-workers are also not generally considered to be workplace harassment but can turn into harassment if no steps are taken to resolve the conflict. Similarly, difficult conditions of employment such as professional practice limitations, organizational changes, or financial restrictions are not considered harassment. Work-related stress, on its own, does not constitute harassment. However, an accumulation of stress factors resulted from harassing behaviours such as those described earlier may result in a harassment situation.

Workplace violence

Violence, whether at a work site or work related, is defined by the OHS Act as the threatened, attempted or actual conduct of a person that causes or is likely to cause physical or psychological injury or harm, and includes domestic or sexual violence.

Source: OHS Act, section 1(yy)

What is workplace violence?

Violence in the workplace could put worker at risk of physical or psychological harm. Workplace violence can include:

- physical attack or aggression (e.g. hitting, shoving, pushing or kicking a worker; throwing an object at a worker; kicking an object the worker is standing on, such as a ladder);
- threatening behaviour (e.g. shaking a fist in a worker's face, wielding a weapon at work, trying to hit a worker, trying to run down a worker using a vehicle or equipment such as a forklift, destroying property or throwing objects);
- verbal or written threats (e.g. verbally threatening to attack a worker, leaving threatening notes or sending threatening emails to express an intent to inflict harm on a worker);
- domestic violence; and
- sexual violence.

Violence is a workplace hazard. It must be addressed during a hazard assessment.

Domestic violence

Domestic violence is a pattern of behaviour used by one person to gain power and control over another with whom a person has or has had a personal relationship. This can range from subtle, coercive forms to violent acts that result in physical harm or death. Examples of behaviour may include physical violence, sexual abuse, financial control, emotional and psychological intimidation, verbal abuse, stalking and using electronic devices to harass and control.

When an employer is aware that a worker is or is likely to be exposed to domestic violence at a work site, the employer must take reasonable precautions to protect the worker and any other persons at the work site likely to be affected.

Source: OHS Code Part 27, Section 390.3

Domestic violence becomes a workplace hazard, and is no longer limited to a personal issue, when it occurs or spills over into the workplace. It may put the targeted worker at risk, and may pose a threat to co-workers.

Domestic violence can occur between, but not limited to:

- current or former intimate partners;
- people of all ages;
- family members;
- people of all racial, economic, educational and religious backgrounds; and
- people in heterosexual and same-sex relationships.

Nature of the relationships could be:

- living together or separately;
- married or unmarried; or
- in short- or long-term relationships.

Sexual violence

Sexual violence as a workplace hazard refers to any sexual act, attempt to obtain a sexual act, or other act directed against a worker's sexuality using coercion, by any person regardless of their relationship to the victim, in a workplace or work related setting.

Sexual violence exists on a continuum from obscene name-calling to rape and/or homicide, and includes on-line forms of sexual violence (e.g. Internet threats and harassment) and sexual exploitation.

Obligations of work site parties

Social expectations about what constitutes workplace health and safety have changed over time. Issues such as psychological health (particularly workplace harassment and bullying) are now considered by the OHS legislation. As part of the changing roles of individuals at the work site, the OHS Act and OHS Code have specific duties employers, supervisors, and workers must follow to address harassment and violence at the workplace.

The OHS Act states that employers must, as far as reasonably practicable, ensure their workers are not subject to or participate in harassment or violence at the work site. Supervisors must, as far as reasonably practicable, ensure workers under the supervisor's supervision are not subject to harassment or violence at work site. Workers also have responsibilities. Workers must refrain from causing or participating in harassment or violence.

Hazard assessment

The hazard assessment and control process is a documented approach to prevent work-related illness or injury.

Workplace harassment and violence are hazards under the OHS Code.

Employers must identify situations that could put workers at risk of harassment or violence at the workplace. Recognizing these real and potential hazards, employers can take steps to eliminate or control them to prevent harm to workers.

A team approach is necessary when doing hazard assessments. The employer must involve the joint work site health and safety committee (HSC) or health and safety (HS) representative, if there is one. If your work site is exempt from having a committee or representative, the employer must involve workers affected by the hazards.

In addition, the employer must ensure that all workers who may be affected by the hazards are familiar with the necessary health and safety measures or procedures to keep themselves and others healthy and safe on the job.

Find more information on the hazard assessment process and templates in: Hazard assessment and control: a handbook for Alberta employers and workers (BP018).

More details about HSC and HS representative are described in the publication: Joint work site health and safety committees (LI036) and Health and safety representatives (LI040).

Harassment prevention plan and violence prevention plan

Every employer must develop and implement a harassment prevention plan and violence prevention plan at the workplace.

The plans must be in writing readily available for reference by workers at the work site. They can be in paper or downloaded electronically. Both formats are acceptable as long as they are readily accessible by workers at the work site.

A harassment prevention plan must include a harassment prevention policy and harassment prevention procedures. A violence prevention plan must include a violence prevention policy and violence prevention procedures.

When developing and implementing the plans, the employer must consult with the joint work site health and safety committee (HSC) or a health and safety (HS) representative if one exists. If your work site is exempt from having a committee or representative, the employer must involve workers affected by these hazards when set up and implement the prevention plans.

Review of plans

In order to protect workers from workplace harassment or violence, the employer is required to review the plans every three years, or more often as necessary. The review should focus on whether the policy and procedures are current and if there are any deficiencies or gaps that need to be addressed. As a result of the review, the plans may or may not need to be revised. If revision is necessary, the plans must be revised to ensure they adequately address the prevention of harassment or violence and that the policies and procedures are current.

The harassment prevention plan and/or violence prevention plan would need to be reviewed more often when a HSC or HS representative recommends a review.

An incident of harassment or violence also triggers a review of the plan. The harassment prevention plan would need to be reviewed more often if there is an incident of harassment at the work site within the three years of the latest review. The violence prevention plan would need to be reviewed more often if there is an incident of violence at the work site within the three years of the latest review.

Employers must consult the HSC and HS representative, if one exists, when reviewing and revising the plans. The employer must consult affected workers if there is not a HSC or HS representative.

Policies and procedures

Harassment prevention and violence prevention policies form an important framework for the proactive prevention and management of harassment and violence in the workplace. Clear policies set overall expectations that harassment and violence are not tolerated in the work environment.

Procedures, as distinguished from the policy itself, outline the methods or processes required to make the policy work on a day-to-day basis. The procedures establish a way of doing things that the employer and workers are to follow.

When developing the policies and procedures, refer to part 27 of the OHS Code for the requirements.

Harassment prevention policy

A harassment prevention policy must state that:

- the employer is committed to eliminating the hazard of harassment, or if the hazard cannot be eliminated, it must be controlled;
- the employer will investigate all incidents of harassment and take corrective action to address the incidents;
- the employer will not disclose the circumstances related to an incident of harassment or the names of the parties involved (including the complainant, the person alleged to have committed the harassment, and any witnesses) except where necessary:

- to investigate the incident or to take corrective action,
- to inform the parties involved in the incident of the results of the investigation and corrective action taken, or
- as required by law;
- the harassment prevention policy is not intended to discourage a worker from exercising rights pursuant to any other law, including the Alberta Human Rights Act.

For a sample policy, see the samples and templates section of this publication.

Harassment prevention procedures

The harassment prevention procedures must include:

- the procedure for workers when reporting harassment;
- the procedure for employers when documenting, investigating and implementing controls to prevent harassment;
- the procedure, in line with the established harassment prevention policy, for employer when informing the parties involved (including the complainant, the person alleged to have committed the harassment, union officials who make the complaint) in an incident of harassment of the results of the investigation and corrective action to be taken.

For a procedures template, see the samples and templates section of this publication.

Violence prevention policy

A violence prevention policy must state that:

- the employer is committed to eliminating the hazard of violence, or if the hazard cannot be eliminated, it must be controlled;
- the employer will investigate all incidents of violence and take corrective action to address the incidents;

- the employer will not disclose the circumstances related to an incident of violence or the names of the complainant, the individual alleged to have committed the violence, and any witnesses, except where necessary:
 - to investigate the incident or to take corrective action,
 - to inform the parties involved in the incident of the results of the investigation and corrective action taken,
 - to inform workers of a specific or general threat of violence or potential violence, or
 - as required by law;
- the employer will disclose only the minimum amount of personal information required that is necessary to inform workers of a specific or general threat of violence or potential violence;
- the violence prevention policy is not intended to discourage a worker from exercising rights pursuant to any other law.

For a sample policy, see the samples and templates section of this publication.

Violence prevention procedures

The violence prevention procedures must include:

- the measures the employer will take to eliminate or if the hazard cannot be eliminated, it must be controlled;
- information about the nature and extent of the hazard of violence, including information related to specific or general threats of violence or potential violence;
- the procedure for employers when disclosing information relating to circumstances of an incident of violence, names of parties involved and personal information;
- the procedure for workers to obtain immediate assistance when an incident of violence occurs;
- the procedure for workers when reporting an incident;
- the procedure for employer when documenting and investigating an incident and implementing any measures to eliminate or control the hazard of violence; and
- the procedure, in line with the established violence prevention policy, for employer when informing the parties involved (including the complainant, the person alleged to have committed the violence, union officials who make the complaint) in an incident of violence or the results of the investigation and corrective action to be taken.

For a procedures template, see the samples and templates section of this publication.

Flexibility – it's your work site

An employer may organize information for the harassment and violence prevention policies and procedures in a manner that suits the organization. For example, the employer may combine the two prevention policies into one document. The OHS legislation establishes general principles along with specific provisions. As long as all the legislative requirements are met, an employer has flexibility.

For the purpose of explaining the requirements of each element within a plan, individual policy samples and procedures templates are provided in this guide.

Worker training

An employer must instruct workers on the hazard of workplace harassment and violence, how to recognize the signs of danger, what to do about it, and how to report it.

An employer must ensure that workers are trained in

- (a) the recognition of violence and harassment;
- (b) the policies, procedures, and workplace arrangements that effectively eliminate or control violence and harassment;
- (c) the appropriate response to violence and harassment, including procedures for obtaining assistance; and
- (d) the procedures for reporting, investigating and documenting incidents of violence and harassment.

Source: OHS Code, Part 27, Section 391

Investigation and reporting of incidents

An employer must carry out an investigation of any incident of harassment or violence and take action to address the incident and prevent it from happening again. The employer must prepare an investigation report, outlining the circumstances of the incident and the corrective action. This report must be retained for at least two years after the incident. The employer must ensure the report is readily available and provide a copy of the report to Alberta OHS on request.

An Alberta OHS officer may also conduct an investigation of the incident to determine contraventions of the OHS legislation. The officer may conduct interviews and gather evidence to determine what happened. Work site parties are required to cooperate with the officer.

OHS officers

OHS officers carry out inspections and investigations to enforce OHS legislation. If officers believe a work site is unhealthy or unsafe, they can call for a variety of corrective measures that may include issuing compliance orders stopping work at the work site(s) or ordering shut down of equipment. Officers can help guide employers and workers to ensure that the OHS rules are followed and provide resources to help employers and workers educate themselves about OHS rights and responsibilities.

Officers, however, do not do dispute resolution among work site parties (e.g. employers, supervisors, workers). Advocating for any work site parties is also not part of an officer's duties. In addition, the officers do not have the authority to impose disciplinary action (e.g. reprimand, termination) on work site parties; dictate how an employer manages their work schedule, placement of workers and staff training; or obligate an employer to compensate (e.g. pay worker for pain and suffering, provide worker with time off with or without pay) workers affected by an incident.

In some circumstances where there may be lost wages associated with an incident, the officer does have authority to require the employer to compensate the worker.

More details about role and duties of an OHS officer are described in the publication: Role and duties of government occupation health and safety officers (LI046)

To ensure confidentiality and protection of personal information, the OHS legislation does not require the participation of HSC or HS representative when employer carries out investigation of incidents of harassment or violence.

Refer to sections 40(5)(b, c, d), 40(7-8) and 53 of the OHS Act for requirements that apply to investigation and reporting of incidents of harassment or violence.

Worker support

An employer must offer support to workers who are affected by an incident of harassment or violence.

An employer must ensure that a worker reporting an injury or adverse symptom resulting from an incident of harassment or violence is advised to consult a health professional (of the worker's choice) for treatment or referral.

Some employers provide an employee assistance program (EAP) at the workplace. An EAP is a confidential, short term, counselling service for employees to offer help in resolving personal problems that are affecting work. If a workplace has an EAP, workers could consider accessing services and resources through the program when seeking support dealing with personal issues from workplace harassment or violence.

When a worker is treated or referred by a physician for treatment relating to harassment or violence that occurred at the work site, and if the treatment sessions occur during regular work hours, the employer cannot make any deduction from the worker's wages and benefits.
