

Alberta Aids to Daily Living

Bulletin #82 Revised

Information on recent directives by the Chief Medical Officer for Alberta Aids to Daily Living (AADL) vendors and specialty suppliers

Please review the information below and use your best judgement regarding essential vs non-essential services and safe conduct for businesses at this time. Information regarding whether or not a service is considered essential can be found here:

<https://www.alberta.ca/essential-services.aspx>

Under Chief Medical Officer of Health (CMOH) Order 07-2020 dated March 27, 2020, health professionals can offer or provide non-essential health services at a place of business only if the services are deemed urgent by the health professional providing the service. If applicable, please seek guidance from your professional college or association.

The CMOH order also states a non-essential health service includes any service that is generally done to protect, promote or maintain health of an individual and where an interruption in the provision of service will not result in an individual's life, health or safety being immediately endangered.
